“ *I met Carroll a couple of years before he retired from NASA. Just before he retired around 1980, I picked up some of the work that he had been doing on the Standard Telemetry and Command Components (STACC) for the Multi-mission Modular Spacecraft (MMS). He was very helpful with my transition into the job. I remember walking into his office, just after they had changed our phone numbers, he had his phone off the hook with a piece of tape covering the speaker. He told me thaty they had given him a phone number which was one digit different than the Washington Post classified ads dept. His phone had been ringing constantly, with wrong numbers. He told me that after he retired, he was going to sell life insurance, and explained why it was the ideal retirement job. I enjoyed working with Carroll, he was a great guy.
