“ To Jared:
I'm sorry we couldn't make that trip to Elfland. One of these days I'll go, and remember when we were kids, laughing and playing and having fun all day just as best friends do. I've never forgotten you over the years and never will for those to come, and I'm sorry we couldn't spend more time together. I know you are no longer pained or burdened by this world, and you watch over all us, friends and family. You are forever loved and cherished. Please guide us, and thank you for the priceless memories.
Love, Samantha

“ Robin and Norm,

We were so very saddened to hear the news of Jared's death. The loss of a child by any means is a profound loss, and we can't begin to understand the depths of your sorrow.

Jared was but a small part of our lives, always a joy from the days when he would knock on our door to get a ride to school after missing the school bus; borrow biology, science, math and psychology textbooks from Richard's library; work in the Wakefield precinct during the 2008 campaign; and just talk while outside mowing the lawn. Jared was always excited about new possibilities and new experiences as he struggled with so many false starts trying to find his own niche in life. We shall always remember

Jared.

May our thoughts and prayers give you strength and courage as you travel through the darkest of these days.

With love and lots of warm hugs,

Richard and Peggy

We found the following and want to pass it on to you:

A new way to look at suicide

Posted by

Tom Zuba on July 06, 2012

I received this from a Facebook friend.

I think it's beautiful and hope it brings some peace and comfort to those whose lives have been touched by suicide...

A few years ago, when a young man died by his own hand, a service for him was conducted by his pastor, the Reverend West Stephens. What he said that day expresses far more eloquently than I can, the message that I'm trying to convey.

Here are some of his words:

"Our friend died on his own battlefield. He was killed in action fighting a civil war. He fought against adversaries that were as real to him as his casket is real to us. They were powerful adversaries. They took toll of his energies and endurance. They exhausted the last vestiges of his courage and his strength. At last these adversaries overwhelmed him. And it appeared that he had lost the war.

But did he? I see a host of victories that he has won!

For one thing - he has won our admiration - because even if he lost the war, we give him credit for his bravery on the battlefield. And we give him credit for the courage and pride and hope that he used as his weapons as long as he could. We shall remember not his death, but his daily victories gained through his kindnesses and thoughtfulness, through his love for his family and friends...for all things beautiful, lovely, and honorable.

We shall remember not his last day of defeat, but we shall remember the many days that he was victorious over overwhelming odds. We shall remember not the years we thought he had left, but the intensity with which he lived the years that he had. Only God knows what this child of His suffered in the silent skirmishes that took place in his soul. But our consolation is that God does know, and understands."

“ To Jared,
I have only become close to you for a brief moment, but you have made a huge impact on me. You were able to make me laugh and think about people and the world around me. You made me feel secure and confident in my emotions and feelings. When you were around, you made a retail job seem tolerable and fun. And, the best part was that sometimes I wouldn't even have to say anything and you would just know how I felt or thought just by staring at me. There is so much to say in the short amount of time I have known you, but I will keep those great little moments to myself. I love and miss you, my friend. Thank you for everything.

To Jared's Family,
I am sorry for your loss and please know that Jared was loved and cared for. He had the most beautiful soul and was so honest. Thank you for him.

“ To Jared's family, I am a cat volunteer who goes to Petsmart on Pickett St on a regular basis. Seeing Jared's smile at cash register 1 was always a joy. He knew when i walked in the door that i would ask for the "key" so he would have it ready to hand over, with a smile, of course....I can speak for all of us who volunteer with PBJ that his kindness and willingness to help will be greatly missed....
