“ Here it is, exactly one month later, the 13th of all days, the 13th fell on a tuesday this month as well. Not a week before his death I thought that at the very least he would be around another 10 years. I actually fully expected him to survive even me seeing as how his father in 92. To say this event was shocking to many would be an understatement. He always put others needs before his own, whether it be those of family, friends, or coworkers. He also rarely spent money on himself, the only new thing in his house in the past decade was probably a 26" TV he bought for himself. He lived like a monk. Always followed up to see how people were doing. Spent much of his time and resources caring for the feral cats he rescued and took to the vet and caring for his ailing dog Winston, who followed his owner and friend into the afterlife not a month later (on the 6th of this month--6, another terrible number. I love and miss both of you so much. -your son
